IBackground

- The aging population requires systematic preparation for problems such as a lack of labor due to a decrease in the working population, a decrease in urban vitality due to an increase in the elderly living alone, an increase in social costs for elderly support, and an increase in elderly poverty and suicide rates.

- In particular, it is necessary to preemptively respond to an aging society through international information sharing by joining the WHO's GNAFCC.

II Direction of plan

- Basically, in order to create an age-friendly city in Buk-gu, the primary purpose was to reflect the eight areas of building an age-friendly city suggested by the WHO and establish detailed action plans for an age-friendly city.
- Furthermore, in order to respond to the aging society, the purpose of this plan is to diagnose the age-friendly community environment in Buk-gu, derive appropriate policy alternatives, and join the WHO-organized global network of age-friendly cities.
- The age-friendly city action plan selects the implementation projects through the results of age-friendliness level survey and the consultation among administrative agencies.
