Declaration on the creation of an age-friendly city

With the advent of the 100-year-old era, a new paradigm for aging is emerging. At a time when creative thinking and challenges are needed, Seocheon-gun seeks to actively create an “age-friendly city.”

In order to guarantee the health and active retirement of residents, create a livable environment, and create a city where people want to continue living even as they age, we declare the following.

First, we will create a “safe and convenient” age-friendly city.

We will create a city where consideration, comfort, and comfort can be felt in the external environment surrounding us, including public transportation systems, cultural and welfare facilities, and housing.

Second, we will create an age-friendly city that is “vibrant and healthy, full of motivation and vitality.” We will provide an opportunity for seniors to demonstrate their life experiences and qualities in a positive way through volunteer work, jobs, community support, health, and lifelong education.

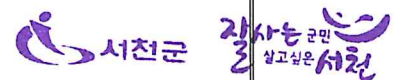

Third, we will create an age-friendly city that emerges as a “community where people want to live their whole lives.” Through communication between all generations, including the elderly, and social respect and consideration, we will establish a welfare system necessary for each generation and create an environment in which appropriate resource distribution can be achieved.

Aging is an unavoidable social challenge, but it is also an area of new policy that requires creativity and innovation. We hope that the creation of a senior-friendly city will serve as an opportunity to lead generation integration and a new welfare paradigm.

In addition, with this declaration, we will work harder to help our community grow to the next level.
