GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT PRAIA

Praia is the capital of Cape Verde and the largest city in the country. One of the most emblematic areas is the "Plateau", where the various historic buildings are concentrated. Among these buildings are the Presidential Palace, the Church "Nossa Senhora da Graça", the Ethnographic Museum and the monument to Diogo Gomes, Portuguese navigator and discoverer of the island of Santiago in 1460.

The construction of the city began in 1615, with a plateau located near a beach (Santa Maria Beach) that offered good conditions for the ships.

Initially used as an illegal port, Praia gradually acquired characteristics of a village, with the relocation of the population of the City of Ribeira Grande (now Cidade Velha) to the region.

In 1770 the capital moved from Ribeira Grande to Praia.

In 1858, by decree, Praia was elevated to the category of city and became the capital of Cape Verde, concentrating the functions of political, religious and economic center.

After the independence of Cape Verde, which occurred on July 5, 1975, the city had a rapid population growth and also the number of facilities. The population of the city of Praia was 131,602 inhabitants in 2010 (last census realized).
